U. of H. senate supports N.S.A. but not C.I.A. funds

The University of Hawaii Student Senate has resolved to "lend unqualified support to the spirit and intentions of the National Student Association."

In the same resolution, the senate also reaffirmed its membership in the N.S.A.

Ramparts magazine recently disclosed that the U.S. National Student Association has received funds from the Central Intelligence Agency. The resolution stated that the Senate finds the C.I.A.-N.S.A. relationship "intolerable."

However, the senate noted that the N.S.A., the largest national student union in America, "has constantly fought for academic freedom and educational reform, supported civil rights activities and developed programs of student service" throughout its 20-year history.

The Associated Students of the University of Hawaii has held membership in the N.S.A. for more than 10 years.

During that time, the A.S.U.H. has utilized the services of the N.S.A., participated in national student congresses and adopted basic policy declarations of the N.S.A.
